Baptist Church

Extracts from a "Meditation" given by Rev. J. J. Chapman preparatory to his baptismal supper at the Baptist church Sunday morning September 2, 1911.

Scripture—Mark XVI, verses 22-23. The parable of the Commandments.

What we are largely due to the influences surrounding us, the influences to which we subject ourselves day by day. A tiny stream starts down in the mountain to flow onwards. It meets men, it meets stones, it meets trees, here a protecting roof, there a bush or other obstacle and it is turned by this in first one direction, then another, and finally as it goes on, turns and turns its channel deeper and deeper. Its course is set and its flow is the resultant of all the forces which meet it on its earlier course.

So with our lives, as we go on our way through life, like tiny streams, here and another there, one influences, a different one tomorrow, and finally our life is set in a permanent road for good or evil, but still influenced by man or by forces as we are on our way.

Religion is one of the most potent influences of sight or sense. Wherever we go we are influenced by religion. Man has manifested a religion, animal of all religions, which is highest in its influence, is the power of our Lord Jesus Christ.

As thus religion manifests itself in a round life, it uses its power, but when Christ himself meets the man, that man is never the same again.

Welcome to the commandment service. We bring to it these commandments of ours—those lives that will go out to narrow into the current of life about us. Here at this service, we find the influence that can prepare us for living tomorrow. We come from different motives, some from strong motives, perhaps from mere force of habit. Many from a true motive. Shall we sit this hour in quiet? Jesus meets us here—no living needed here. When he talked to men he drew illustrations from the common things. He brought them no mysteries, no secret water from sacred caves to神秘的水。The slate, the dishes, he used as symbols. Fishermen who listened to him were moved because he knew the fishermen's work. Farmers, as they heard their fields remember him, and his story of the master, of the master and his story of the master. The fisherman, who spent the day at his noonday meal, recalled the little lad with his five loaves and two fishes, whose meal fed the five thousand. When Jesus wished to teach disciples a great lesson, he took bread and spoke to them of the bread of life.

What must we do as we come to this Lord's table? The disciples as they met in that upper room were striving for the chief places for superiority. Christ in accordance with oriental fashion, washed their feet, the king of heaven became a servant. We get here a lesson of humility. Christ washed the feet of Judas. We get here a lesson of love and forgiveness. As we come to this Lord's table, we need to come sobering not only our friends, but loving and forgetting our enemies.

Jesus said at this table: "I am the bread of life." Bread, not a false stimulus to make us temporarily strong and happy, but bread to give us real strength, strength to go out tomorrow and meet temptation triumphantly. We may go from the service grace for all temptation, grace that enables us to live up to our ideals.

We learn here anew of Christ's supreme sacrifice for you and me. The sacrifice can come to us across the ages to struggle with him against sin, to consecrate ourselves to the saving of men.

As Christians, too often we are like the world that the world's people little or no difference in its immorality, and we compromise here and there. Our ideals fall away.

Here at this table, if we truly meet our Lord today, if we get a vision of him, of his minister here for the world, we shall go forth hereafter with new life. We shall be true to our ideals. We shall conquer sin in ourselves and in others.

For What Intent Ye Have Sent for Me—Rev. Mr. Antick, who has recently been called to the pastorate of the Central Baptist church, preached a strong and moving sermon Sunday last, the morning services, taking for his text, the latter part of Acts 19:25. "I ask for what intent ye have sent for me."

This being the first sermon that Rev. Antick has preached to the church that he serves, he said that he wished to apply a message that he
